

What an International Taxpayer needs to know about Streamlined Procedures, and avoid penalties or criminal liability ?

U.S. taxpayers overseas can now get right with the government with a special program. But they need to act before the government does or they are out of luck.

The U.S. Internal Revenue Service said this special program have been expanded and modified to accommodate a broader group of U.S. taxpayers, including those living and working overseas. Taxpayers who made errors or omissions can file amended or delinquent returns as long as they didn't do so on purpose.

With all the rules and regulations, overseas taxpayers can easily be confused and face massive penalties and fines later. That's why they need a review by a tax professional highly skilled in the IRS offshore voluntary disclosure program.

Once the IRS begins looking into an individual return, the taxpayer no longer is eligible for this program that lets them avoid criminal liability.
